How Texas embodies the inevitability of Total System Collapse

Let me start out with this. I hate Texans, really annoying people. Nothing gets under my skin like some Texan complaining that a few thousand predominantly White & Conservative Californians are “turning the state blue,” seemingly clueless to the fact that it’s actually the millions of spics jumping the Rio Grande for the last 50 years. That being said, I do think Texas has a fairly proud & cool history that they do well to take pride in. OG Texas embodied all the greatest qualities of the White race, in stark contrast to the Mestizo’s & Redskins they forced out.

Over the course of the last century, particularly after the Reconstruction Era, Texas has become increasingly Americanized. Texas, to many, is the quintessential American state & an icon of Conservatives. A massive chunk of people I’ve met in the military are Texan, & god will they make sure you’re aware. In the last 50 years, as the Leftist clique has really taken off & the Conservative element tries harder to pump the breaks, Texas has joined other “dark red” states in feeling increasingly disunited with the Federal Government & the “dark blue” states. In the wake of the 2020 election & the Biden admin, this attitude has increasingly gotten more openly anti-government.

Considering Texas is second only to California in being the most victimized by the hordes of mud, it only makes sense that this would be the spark to set off an open confrontation between locals & feds. In 2005, Texas started Operation Linebacker which was similar in concept to the current situation but on a much smaller & less volatile scale.

In 2021, Governor Abbot would officially launch Operation Lone Star. The Biden admin, which seems to have had the express purpose of getting as many non-Whites into the country as possible, was naturally irked by this. In a rather shocking display of resistance from the historically limp wristed Conservatives, Texas essentially told the feds to fuck off. This even went to the extent of physically removing federal forces (mainly Border Patrol) from the area by Texas National Guard members. The Supreme Court, probably trying to stay in the realm of civility, told Texas to stand down. This was challenged in court, but completely ignored on the ground.

Something that I don’t think a lot of people understand is how weird this all is. A state acting not only in disregard to the federal government, but openly against it. Much like stuff I’ve previously mentioned with things like the BoogLARP movement, election denial, the J6 riots, etc., the whole “nothing ever happens” narrative is remarkably incorrect. So the idea of Texas declaring independence really isn’t that much of a jump, especially in an environment where state controlled & federal controlled groups are already in a sort of low level conflict with each other.

So, what does that mean for us? After all, isn’t virtually the entire Independence movement dominated by otherwise standard conservatives?

Besides, Texas is already a White minority state. Well, there’s a lot of reasons this would turn out well for us.

First, the pro-White position. The following is quoted from The American Futurist’s article “Texas Independence”:

“First, it will have a big impact on Whites in the entire country. Because of the massive migration of White people moving to Texas to escape the crumbling US and the non-White migration moving out. Considering the non-Whites in Texas know full well that the Texas independence movement is dominated by Whites and leans heavily towards our political direction. They’re not going to stay when all their federal protections from things like the Civil Rights Act and the 14th Amendment that were forced upon us to protect them no longer apply.

Beyond that, there’s no more federal free money for them! Non-Whites will be flooding states like Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and New Mexico to continue their cash flow from Washington, D.C., in the months leading after Texas independence. White liberals will be moving to the Northeast, Midwest, or other parts of the South, such as Georgia or the Carolinas.”

To expand on that, it’s fairly well known that the promise of free shit is what motivates most border jumpers to come here. Texas will not have the economic ability to provide this, but will have the ideological incentive to not do it. Any migrant who thinks of going to Texas of all places in this scenario isn’t even retarded, they’re actually schizophrenic.

A criticism of this is that the already existing non-White population will flood the otherwise White states surrounding Texas, simply pushing the problem onto other Kinsfolk. A rebuttal to this point is twofold. Firstly, good. It’ll cause the lukewarm Conservatives to actually deal with the ramifications of this situation. It’s a radicalization & acceleration agent. Secondly, most of these nearby states are run by governments that openly support Operation Lone Star, including sending NG troops to assist the TNG. In this scenario, they very well might join Texas & follow it’s lead. Regardless of any milquetoast Conservatism, this will be a decidedly pro-White & generally RW bloc. The Blacks & Browns most likely won’t risk living under this “recreation of the confederacy” led by “actual h*cking nazis!” They’ll bounce to the negrophilic states under blue leadership.

Now, what would this look like? It would be peaceful at first, based on some referendum & done formally. If the current Biden admin is anything to judge how the System is evolving, there’s probably going to be an overreaction militarily. Due to US law & optics, I doubt they’ll immediately send in the active duty military to quell this uprising. It will most likely be based around the Secret Police (FBI, ATF, Border Patrol, Marshalls, etc.) and the National Guard units of dark blue states like Cali. The Feds would have to be extremely careful in this situation. Texas will be a symbol, the territorial embodiment of what Trump represents as a person. It will likely attract all of the more radical conservatives to join the fray. A large escalation in Texas would directly lead to nationwide ideological violence.

For us, this is the best case scenario. I’ve done operations in Texas, it sucks. Logistical difficulties are obvious, but the terrain & weather are also a nightmare. With the sheer amount of people (let’s say a quarter of the White population, around 5 million), the Federal forces would be spread extremely thin both in manpower & resources. Even if they called in the entire DoD, assuming there aren’t mass desertions, this would be so. This means the System will be absolutely torching resources in Texas, leaving huge gaps in the security of every other part of the country. Not only fairly moderate groups like Threepers, but also revolutionary groups like Atomwaffen Division, would be able to form & operate unharassed by the FBI. Hell, they would be able to openly recruit & operate with nothing but the local law enforcement standing in the way (depending on where they are, if things end ip funneled into a Pro-Texas vs Loyalist dichotomy than even center right types would end up seeing AWD as an ally. Imagine an openly NS revolutionary group operating freely in NorCal because everyone around is Pro-Texas.) Accelerationist groups (even if they don’t know that’s what they are) will inevitably end up conducting activism reminiscent of the Partisan operations of WW2, putting further stress on the System.

Another important factor to keep in mind, optics. Imagine you’re some European or something. Suddenly, the world’s only superpower has one if its largest regions declare independence & possibly open war against the government. The infamous US military (which has already become less of a looming threat nowadays, as we shift to a multipolar world) is licked down in combat within its own borders. The geopolitical standing of the US will collapse immediately. It would be like if Chechnya declared independence (again) right now as Russia is postering against NATO. Suddenly, the US is on the same level as Syria or Colombia.

Now that I got my military sparging out of the way, let’s look at the peaceful scenario. The Feds would loose their mind, probably place embargoes & refuse to recognize the state. The highest point of violence is federal forces, the same agencies previously mentioned, are arrested & sent off. Texas deals with the internal fallout, but ultimately the same lefties & brownoids from before end up packing up & becoming LAs newest refugees. The prospect of Republicans ever winning another election ends immediately without the electoral votes of Texas. America becomes a true one party state, beyond the state level. The influx of non-Whites into soft red states will probably make this worse. This will suck for the rest of us, but will ultimately serve as a radicalization & acceleration agent.

Texas will be a RW state, the lefties would simply escape. This will allow multiple parties to form to make up the political landscape of a new country. Some of these will be moderate, some radical. Many will be decidedly pro-White. I don’t think a large number of people will be lobbying for a return to the US at first, purely because they would likely support the Fed & be charged with treason, than exiled or imprisoned. It’s not unlikely that openly NS parties will grow in the aftermath, based off the already existing NS scene. This gives us a safe haven to be based out of, beyond the reach of the Feds. I brought up similar points in my previous article on the NTI so I won’t repeat myself too much.

The most important thing is the loss to the System. The US will be cut off from the abundant resources that Texas gives it, including billions in taxes. Honestly, this might crash the economy on the spot. If not, it takes valuable resources away from the System & serves to accelerate it’s Collapse.

James Mason often spoke of Propaganda of the Deed, and for good reason as it’s something the anarchist’s made a great point about. Texas leaving the US will serve as the catalyst for anyone else to do the same. I already mentioned how allied states could form a neo-Confederacy, and this is increasingly likely since any RWers will be completely disenfranchised from the federal government. It would essentially be the only option. This could also lead the more hardline leftist states to do the same. I’m mainly speaking of California, but this would be utterly chaotic because lefties always fail to realize that their support begins & ends in the cities. Basically everything north of Sacramento & east of Beaumont is dark red, they’re just outnumbered by the urban hellscape bug colonies. But, again, agents of acceleration.

That’s all I really have to say on the topic. Anyone who’s NS/WN, or just generally anti-System, should support Texas independence. Anything that harms the System & gets the yuppies out of their comfort zone is inherently good. Hopefully the happenings keep happening with increasing frequency and severity, because we’re racing the clock. Collapse is well on the way, a diseased animal cannot live long & thus a diseased system can’t either, it’s just up to you where you’re place in the aftermath is.

I think the prospect of the US cutting of Texas would have tremendous effects on the US & Canada's logistics (particularly the tremendous combined oil & grain exports).

The vast majority of US (& by extension Canadian) oil exports go through Texas (the rest of inland exports/imports go through southern Louisiana). Also, almost all American refineries aren't designed for domestic oil types so they're dependent on imports. Texas contains 32% of US petro refining capacity, with the rest mainly being concentrated nearby.

The Midwest's massive grain exports primarily travel by train to leave Texas ports (some gets sent on barges down the Mississippi to Louisiana's ports). Without access to global markets the Midwest would be devastated. This would cause famine in the turd world.

Also a lot of trade with Mexico would be totally bottlenecked.

Erm good article but I don't really agree with some of this. I see Texas independence as an extremely remote possibility (maybe 3% chance within the next 25 years). We all see what happened the last time people tried to leave.

Also, I don't really see this influx of whites moving to Texas as browns move out. Many Mexican families are from the region of Texas from before it was even a territory, and still live in the same 25 square mile radius Texas is about to vote red for the last time ever because of the trillion Latrinx that have illegally crossed. Much like the PNW movement, there will never be sufficient numbers to balance out NGOs spamming browns
